Not illustrated. 1910 Excerpt: ...apparel when inwardly he is the same. You are fighting for the Colonies to-day, because of the fact that you believe them right, but should you, still retaining this belief, fight for the King to-morrow because the change brought you more money, you would then be a turn-coat. First Soldier rising angrily: I like not the insinuation in that speech. Going to him. What mean you thereby? Third Soldier: I mean nothing except that I liked not your insinuation that the good Colonel Washington is a turn-coat. First Soldier: But you will not deny that he is an aristocrat and a man of wealth? Third Soldier: Why should I deny what all the world knows? First Soldier: Then, of course, he will not accept an office at the hands of a rebellious Congress. Second and Third Soldiers rising: Take care, take care. Second Soldier: It were well for you to choose your words more carefully. We want no Tory language here. first Soldier goes up stage. Courier enters at right: Great news, great news, the Congress assembled in Philadelphia has appointed Colonel George Washington as Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Army, and he is even now on his way to Cambridge. Here are some letters. Throws down a number of letters and turns to right exit. Third Soldier picks up letters. First Soldier running to Courier: Stay and tell us more of this. Courier: Nay, I cannot; I must ride on; my horse is waiting. Exit at right. Third Soldier handing out letters: Some for each of us. Perhaps, now, we will hear more of this matter. They all sit and open letters. Fourth Soldier enters at right: News from Philadelphia! Great news. All start up and surround him. George Washington of Virginia has been made Commanderin-Chief of the Continental Army with the title of General. First Soldier: Thy news is la...
